NCDJ

the National Center on Disability and Journalism at Arizona State University

announces The Katherine Schneider Journalism Award for Excellence in Reporting on Disability

The first national contest devoted exclusively to disability coverage.

Entries will be accepted beginning in early 2013 at ncdj.org. Each entry may consist of a single story or story package published in print or online or broadcast on radio or television.

Prizes include:

- A $5,000 first-place award and an invitation to speak at the Cronkite School
- A $1,500 second-place award
- $500 honorable mention awards

Entries must be published or aired between July 1, 2012, and June 30, 2013. Submissions are due by Aug. 1, 2013.

The National Center on Disability and Journalism has been housed at the Cronkite School since 2008, offering resources and materials for journalists covering disability issues and topics. [For more information about NCDJ and the contest, visit \[ncdj.org\]\(http://ncdj.org\).](http://ncdj.org)
